Farmers Great House

"Farmers Great House" was originally built in 1670 on an elevated ridge overlooking the scenic West Coast of the island. It enjoys a gorgeous sea view to the west and cooling tropical breezes from the east. Nestled amongst the trees and tropical foliage the location is peaceful and calming. Built predominately of coral stone the home has a unique older traditional Barbadian style which the owners have maintained while cleverly converting the layout into a more practical use of space.

After the 1831 hurricane which destroyed the second level, some redesigning was done. The yam room downstairs was converted into a large kitchen with open-plan seating. This allowed for a spacious living space above with beautiful South American pine floor...
